

NEWS Thursday 26th February 2009

Curtis Wood Architects kick-start 2009 with new London fight club

www.curtiswoodarchitects.com

Curtis Wood Architects have won the commission for the design of a new Central London gym and training centre for world-class fighters.

Located on the corner of York Way and Pentonville Road, in the recently completed office and leisure development at Regent's Quarter in London's King's Cross, the new facility is scheduled to open in Jan 2010. The gym will specialise in boxing, Jujitsu and Cage fighting and will have ancillary facilities for training such as strength building, climbing walls and rope climbing.

Speaking from Curtis Wood's London studio, architect Chloe Young comments;

'We are delighted to have been appointed for this exciting leisure project. The existing shell in the new Regent's Quarter development provides a fantastic opportunity to create a tailored solution for Kombat London. The project will combine the intense atmosphere of the traditional boxing gym, with the high quality facilities expected from a contemporary member's gym. The design concept is to combine raw 'urban' workout spaces with luxurious relaxation areas, a juice bar and reception, changing rooms and saunas.

The client has an aspiration to create a world class training centre in Central London and we look forward to building on our leisure experience, and working closely with the client to ensure this is achieved"

Curtis Wood Architects
23-28 Penn Street, London N1 5DL
Tel: 020 7684 1400
www.curtiswoodarchitects.com

Media enquiries to and images available from Satellite MPR
Tel: 01903 885 414
www.satellitempr.com